might be useful to young men and women.

I asked how he came to invent the puller.

He told me that in his own shop, pulling problems were terrible – no matter what machines they used, there was nearly always hammering and chiselling to do, and lots of time wasted. When wages went up, that time became costly, so he decided he had to find ways to make the jobs easier.

"I got in so deep, spent so much time and money on devising a puller that I could not quit. I was hooked. When I had the principle established (alignment of stress was the principle), I thought I was made. You have to watch yourself. You can see millions pouring watch yourself. You can see millions pouring in. You could go off your rocker. I knew nothing in life came that easy . . . and I was right. Years and years and thousands upon thousands of dollars still had to be spent to perfect the device, to get the patents established, to make up working models." In short, an inventor's life, like a policeman's, is not an easy one

"Was it easy to find someone to manufacture and sell your puller once perfected?" I asked.

He laughed. Apparently he had every-body in the country eager to make and sell the thing for him. "But that's important — you must have the right manufacturer, the right peope.

He had some advice on this point. Go to big people. They got big because they are big in nature and think big. They are less likely to let you down. He said that in all his business experience, he found that the bigger the Company, the safer he felt. He found he could trust them. They would him a yes or no, and mean it. And, oddly enough, they seemed more human.

"And never give up. Anything you start, see it through as long as you have any faith in it. And never expect it to be easy—you'll fool yourself if you do."

Open Letter To The Prime Minister

My Dear Mr. Prime Minister

My Dear Mr. Prime Minister:
We feel that we owe it to you,
Sir, and to the Canadian people to detail the reasons why we have circulated and presented a petition urging that all Canadians be allowed to exercise their right to vote on their flag. Perhaps we can do this best by answering the objections brought against a plebiacite.
It is said that a plebiacite would divided the nation. Sir, Canada is a divided nation. We can, however, work toward the greatest possible measure of national unity by clearly and unequivocally doing the majority's will I cannot say, Sir, nor can you, just what is the majority's will unless we count it citizen by citizen. Each Canadian given an equal vote can unite in the knowledge that the democratic principle is being respected, and every Canadian would be bound to accept the majority decision.
Noli irritare feones — it misht cision. Noti irritare teones — it might have been well to have counselled national unity earlier on with what aphorism in mind. But now the lion is aroused, and it will take at least a plebsicile to restore his calm. Far from dividing the nation, a plebsicile would raise the flag issue out of the heat of ethnic dispute and the smoke of party politics into the clear air of direct and popular choice. Whatever the choice, it would, by definition, be popular. Any flag (particularly one hot off the drawing board) must prove that it will not be the object of nearly universal contempt. It is said that our representatives were elected to decide the flag. There was more than one plank in the Liberal platform, and many who voted for your party's flag resolution, Sir, did not dream that a "distinctive flag" must exclude all symbols of our heritage. Surely most Canadians rejected a flag change when the majority rejected the party that proposed it. The reference in the platform to a "distinctive" flag was misleading. A flag "distinctive" is irrelevant to the debate. It is the right slogan for the wrong battle — a battle won years ago when Canadians rightly demanded a flag distinct from the Great Union flag of Bristian. The resulting "distinctive" flag was, of course, the Canadian Red Ensign, which was so described in the Order-in-Council of 1945. The Easlagn, bearing the shield of Canadia, cannot be confused with any other flag on earth. We are disturbed by the cranked-up campaign to ex-change this distinctive flag, rich in meaning, for one created out of whole cloth which many millions of us think distinctly undistin-guished.

Surely a governemnt sincerely concerned for national unity would honor and perpetuate the graphic symbols of both French and British founding peoples. The present government, apparently unable to reconcile the legitimate claims of each, is ducking the problem by erasing the memory of both. Three-quarters of the U.S. flag is devoted to reminding Americans that they began as thirteen British colnies. Unlike Dahomey, Gabon, Mali, and the Malagasy Republic, Canada was not born yesterday. We neither need nor want a brand new flag. Should you doubt this, Sir, we urge you to put it to the test. Only a plobiscite will relieve the building bitterness of a victimized majority. Canadians know that a Parliatest. Only a plobiscite will relieve the building bitterness of a victimized majority.

Canadians know that a Parliament, precariously balanced should not decide this issue. They know that thembers are not being asked to vote for a flag, but against an election. They know that a plebiscite will clear the air and until all who honor the democratic process. They know that this issue, unlike most others, requires no aroane knowledge and no deep study. It is an issue on which every Canadian nas an opinion, and should have a vote.

Yours respectfully,
Sherwood J. Becket Sugden, Chairman,
Emergency Committee to Save the Canadian Red Ensign.

Report From Parliament Hill

(By Lawrence E. Kindt, M.P.)

The Flag Debate is the main the office of interest on Parliament Hill. One severe criticism has been the method used by the Prime Minister in presenting the flag issue to Parliament.

Various Opposition Members have pointed out that if Mr. Pearson had presented his flag design and told Parliament that all MP's could vote as they liked, regardless of Parly, as to whether or not they liked the design, the P. M. would have been on much firmer ground.

However, Mr. Pearson chose for would have been on much tirmer ground. However, Mr. Pearson chose to tell Parliament that if his design was not approved he would resign and there would be a general election. Nearly everyone agrees that a general election on the flag issu would be a disaster for Canada, and might well divide the country forever. Thus, the flag matter has been made a straight partisan and political issue, which, in my opinion, is most unfortunate and should not have been done.

The big question still remains—why did the Prime Minister bring such a controversial matter before Parliament at this time, when other and more urgent malters.

fore Parliament at this time, when other and more urgent matters should have been dealt with? On the opening day of the Flag Debate, Mr. Diefenbaker moved an amendment to the flag resolution, requesting that a plebiscite be taken on the matter, so that the people of Canada could have a voice in the selection of their flag. The government has indicated that it will not accept this amendment.

The use of a plebiscite in Parliamentary democracies is a very rare thing, and has only been used twice before in Canada — once in the last century on the question of twice before in Canada — once in the last century on the question of prohibition, and again in the early 1940's on the question of conscription

1940's on the question of conscription of conscription of a plebiscite it can be argued that it is the duty of elected MP's to do the country's business' (that's what hey are in Parliament for) and that choice of a flag is certainly a matter of Government business and policy. In this case, it can be equally argued that a plebiscite should be taken. Edmund Burke, in his famous speech to the electors of Bristol early in the last century, in what has now become a classic definition of the duties of an MP-pointed out certain things.

Most important of all, Burke pointed out, that it was the duty of an MP to use his own judgment in deciding matters of public interest before Parliament, since het MP) had the particular facts and information concerning the matter at issue at his disposal, and thus he is in a better position on make the decision than his constituents (who in nearly every case would not have the information stituents (who in nearly every case would not have the information available on which to make a de-available on which to make a decision).

However, in matters that involve deep moral or emotional issues, such as the use of alcohol, the retention of capital punishment (and in this case, the choice of a flag), the public itself has just as much formation on the subject as the elected representatives, and indeed since purely moral or emotional matters are involved, the MP cannot really speak for his constitution. In these rare cases it is not a question of making a decision or judgment on factual matters( then clearly the duty of an MP) but rather a matter of personal feelings, for which an MP cannot speak on behalf of his constituents, as their views may be very different from his.

In these rare and special cases, are his best is the available for the sufficience of the sufficience of the sufficient for the sufficient form his.

In these rare and special cases, plebiscite is thus justified. In my iew, the flag issue is one of these

Q-Who decides whether or not I am entitled to benefit?

A-An insurance officer decides whether year claim for benefit may be allowed. If you are not satisfied with his decision, you may appeal to a board of referees. You must, however, make your appeal within 30 days of the date you receive the decision.

ment insurance Commission.

Q—May I go away from home while receiving benefit?

A—If for any reason you have to leave your local office area for a short period, be sure that you inform your local office BEFORE YOU GO, and ascertain whether you may be considered available for work during your absence. You should make arrangements so that you can be notified of any suitable employment opportunities and be ready to return immediately to accept at once any suitable work which turns up. Benefit will not be paid for if your absence is for the purpose of taking a holiday.

Q—If I move from one district to another, what do I have to do?

A—If you are moving from one job to another take your insurance book with you and give it to your new employer. Perhaps you are unemployed and claiming benefit and are moving to a new area for good reasons. If so, before you leave you must tell the local office at which you made your claim what you intend to do. Then, as soon as you strive at your destination, you must report to the local office ther and give the officials all the information they need to transfer your claim to that office.

The realities

The rew budget very clearly illustrated how diffeuit a country
Canada is to govern We have builtin problems of great magnitude
But what we call a democracy in 1864 makes it incredibly difficult for a government to do the things the national interest calls for.
Certainly, in its budget, the government has made a number of sensible and constructive moves. It has extended the period of fast write-offs for new producers in depressed areas. It is actively encouraging our millions of teenagers to equity themselves with the skills necessary in an increasing complex technical age. It has hopes for widening Canadian participation in the ownership of Canadian

But the basic dilemma of how to maintain high Canadian living standards and create an economy more capable of determining its own destiny remains unresolved.

How long can we survive with prosperity primed by budget deficits? With unemployment and impending inflation? With balance of oayments deficits and rising foreign ownership that requires everhigher dividend payments abroad?

This is Mr. Gordon's dilemma. It is the dilemma of all Canadians
The first budget presented by Mr.
Gordon attempted to tackle this dilemma by making significant changes in Canadia's commercial policies. Those plans didn't work Many Canadians now think nothing effective and acceptable to most people can be concocted.

The present budget attempts no

The present outget attempts no major changes. It is acceptable to most because of the present high level of business activity, and because it avoids the difficult and important problems.

But neither the failure of the first budget nor the neutrality of the present budget should be allowed to mask the facts as to where Canada's present course eventually leads. Do Canadians care? Are they willing to accept hard and basic changes in our commercial policies, our trade policies and our tax policies, our government but voters dislike facing hard realities.

In Memoriam

In Loving Memory of Our Dear Mother, Carmela Ferrara, Who Passed Away July 2, 1962: Just of you today we are thinking, But then, Mother, that is nothing new.

We thought of you yesterday,
And the day before that, too.
We will think of you tomorrow,
And each day all thro' the year;
We will think of you forever,
For to us you were so dear.
Your thoughts were so full of us
You never could forget,
So we know that where you are
You must be waiting yet.

They say time heals all sorrows
And helps us to forget;
But two years so far have only proved
How much we miss you yet,
Lovingly Remembered by Sons,
Daughters and Families.

Mrs. Clara Marconi recently graduated as a Certified Nursing Aide.
